Evidence-Based Decision-Making for Reading Improvement

- What we know:
 - many children are not learning to read as expected
- What we don't know:
 - the context-specific causes of low reading performance
 - the context-specific solutions to low reading performance

Solution: LitScan 360

Materials

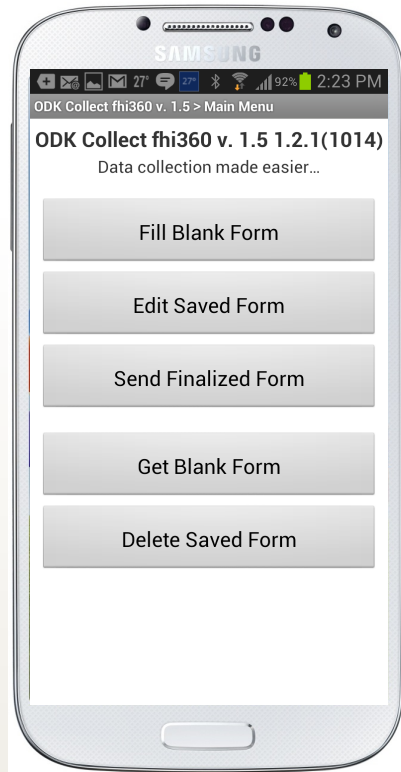

- What texts do teachers use to teach reading?
- How frequently do teachers use each text type?

Action

- Improved text content
- Improve text delivery systems
- Mobilization of books publishers
- Community mobilization to produce local, low-cost texts
- Teacher education on selection and use of texts

LitScan 360: Dashboard

LitScan Pilot Methods

- Qualitative only: interviews and focus groups, using open-ended questions
- Sample: key actors that design, implement and research reading-related policies and practices in Peru
- 25 in-depth interviews and 6 focus groups between August 2012 and January 2013
- Transcription and analysis of data according to the main themes in Lit360 framework

Select Findings

- Curriculum & Assessment:
 - MoE has clear curricular approach to reading instruction (Enfoque Comunicativo Textual); informants reported that approach requires sophisticated teaching techniques beyond capacity of both teacher trainers and teachers
- School leadership:
 - MoE unit responsible for assessment successfully disseminated 'folletos' to schools; informants reported that school principals did not
- Teachers:
 - Numerous opportunities for TPD at all levels of system; informants reported that content of TPD does not allow for translation of theory to practice

Conclusions

- LitScan questions should be developed through iterative process with stakeholders
- LitScan should be both quantitative (for rapid reporting and action) and qualitative (to examine key findings in depth)
- LitScan can be used at any level of a system to gather actionable data
- LitScan can be used to mobilize actors around reading challenges – need to link to policy dialogue
